Drash v'DaSh – a Pesach Message and Greeting
 "A Taste of Garlic"

During a trip to the bank today, I overheard one employee say to another that today – April 19th – is National Garlic Day. This reminded me of a question posed by the rabbi of the very first "Pesach program" that I attended (back in 1979) as part of a set of riddles that were distributed at the Seder: "Where is garlic mentioned in the Pesach Haggadah?" (The question is somewhat ironic, because garlic is one of those foods that is not consumed by certain Jewish communities – not at the Seder, nor at any other time over the Pesach holiday.)

The answer is al shum mah, which appears in three successive paragraphs about Pesach (as in the meat of the Paschal offering), Matzah, and Maror, preceded by the famous introduction, "Rabban Gamliel would say that one who does not recite these three things has not fulfilled his obligation". (Commentators debate whether the unfulfilled obligation is that of Maggid - the Pesach story - or the requisite Pesach, Matzah, and Maror foods.)

While the Hebrew word for garlic is indeed shum, of course the expression al shum mah refers to something else entirely, that is why do we eat Pesach, Matzah, and Maror at the Seder. But aside from answering that question, it appears that it is insufficient to merely eat those foods, rather one must understand and appreciate the significance of that consumption. There is an expression that dates back to the mid-1800s, "You are what you eat", but perhaps an improved adaptation would be "You are what you know about what you're eating."

These three foods taken together symbolize servitude and salvation, labor and liberation. They are a reminder of where we once were, and where we are now. The knowledge that however dark things may get, there is always the light at the end of the tunnel, me-afela le-or gadol.
